

Dhruv Nirmal

Melbourne, Australia | dhruvnirmal2111@gmail.com | +61 406 259 619 | LinkedIn | GitHub

22 July 2026

Hiring Manager, BOUNCE, Melbourne VIC

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am writing to apply for the Commercial & Procurement Analyst role at BOUNCE. What draws me to it is the shape of the work itself: a role that sits in Finance but earns its keep out at the venues and with suppliers, turning a messy commercial question into a case someone can act on rather than a report that sits on a shelf. That is how I already work, and reporting into a Commercial Manager across a growing network of venues is exactly the kind of setting where a steady analyst who follows through matters most.

The clearest proof of that is a pricing and margin engagement I ran end to end as the sole analyst for a restaurant chain across Australia and New Zealand. I built a structured product catalog of around 3,000 items, a pricing dashboard tracking category-level price movement so the procurement team could negotiate better supplier deals, and a second dashboard flagging cheaper substitute products. I presented the findings directly to the Chief Procurement Officer and the food category manager in regular reviews, and over a year that work helped the client capture around 30 percent, roughly A$2 million, of savings in their largest category. It is the same rhythm BOUNCE needs across F&B: margin and supplier analysis that leads somewhere, not analysis for its own sake.

I bring real range alongside that. I built a spend-categorisation model that structured roughly A$12 billion of a client's annual spend into categories, giving their team a much cleaner base for supplier evaluation. I built a Prophet forecasting model that projects raw-material inventory three months ahead for a fresh-produce client within a 12 to 14 percent error margin, plus a bill of materials and automated stock reports with reorder alerts for other accounts, all of it aimed at the same question BOUNCE is asking: what should we be ordering, and when. Alongside my day job I also built Facit, a profitability tool for independent cafes that tracks food cost percentage, gross margin and supplier price movement week to week, so I have thought about F&B margins from both the analyst side and the operator side.

BOUNCE sits at an interesting intersection: an entertainment business where food and beverage is becoming a real commercial lever across the network, not an afterthought. That is precisely the kind of problem I like, messy, multi-site, and genuinely commercial, where curiosity and a bit of relationship building with suppliers and internal teams turn into a measurable improvement in margin. I would welcome the chance to talk through how I could contribute to that from day one. You can reach me at dhruvnirmal2111@gmail.com or +61 406 259 619.

Yours sincerely,

Dhruv Nirmal